This book may be different from similar publications in that it does not downplay the importance of negative experiences with involuntary sexual contacts between minors and adults. It firmly opposes such involuntary contacts, as well as phenomena related to it, such as child prostitution and involuntary child pornography

On the other hand, it tries to show that there are voluntary affectionate relationships between minors and unrelated adults without an inherent negative impact. Such relationships form the basis of a search for extensive ethical criteria for partial legalization. The author believes that only responsible, monitored voluntary relationships deserve acceptance.
